Celebrating the Impact of PARCH: Pencoe Anti-Racist Champions

What an incredible term it's been for our PARCH (Pencoe Anti-Racist Champions) team! Their unwavering commitment to promoting anti-racism across the school and wider community has been truly inspirational.

This powerful work has not gone unnoticed. We were honoured to welcome Emma Wools, the South Wales Police and Crime Commissioner, to our school. Our learners proudly shared their journey, and the Commissioner was deeply impressed by their dedication and maturity in championing such an important cause.

PARCH learners were invited by DARPL (Diversity and Anti-Racist Professional Learning) to share their work with key policy makers from across Wales. They had the remarkable opportunity to present their work to over 50 Welsh Government ministers and officials. Their professionalism, confidence, and clarity in delivering such a vital message was outstanding.

This term also marked the conclusion of their visits to our cluster primary schools, where they engaged younger learners in discussions about anti-racism and allyship.

Looking ahead, the team is now working to develop a cluster-wide anti-racist learner charter, alongside interventions and policies that will strengthen our shared commitment across schools.

At Pencoe, we are proud to be at the forefront of building an anti-racist school culture. We're excited to expand this work even further by involving parents and carers from September onwards, please stay tuned for more information.

This is heart work and we are immensely proud of the learners leading it with such passion and purpose.
